

George the knight

George was a knight. He wanted to save the princess. So one day, he set off to go to the dragon's castle.

Outside of the castle, he met Steven, the donkey. He told George that he was once a human, but the dragon used potions to turn him into a donkey. Steven told George to get to the Spring of Power to receive the sword from Goddess Hylia. "You cannot defeat the dragon without the sword, now go forth my hero," said Steven.

After George heard Steven's words and went to the Spring. Finally he reached the Spring, but there was one problem, the sword was surrounded by water, so George came up with something, he would have to drink all of the water.

George took his first sip, and whoosh! The water was gone and there was a path for him to walk through. He felt much stronger than before...so, he grabbed the sword and returned to the castle.

The battle with the dragon had begun. Though the trip back to the castle was tough, George still managed. He fought with the dragon for many hours. But in the end, he won. Steven turned back to a human, and George married the princess, so it was a happy ending after all.
